They must also attach a certificate or other proof of language proficiency if they have obtained it by the date of application. This does not apply to applicants for whose mother tongue is one of these languages or to applicants who have completed their secondary school or Bachelor's studies in English or French. These documents form a mandatory appendix to the application.
- c) If the application is formally incomplete, does not contain all the necessary information, is missing any of the required documents, or is missing any of the required attachments, the Faculty of Economics will send the applicant an electronic invitation to correct the defects within 5 days. Article 2

Determination of the ranking of applicants

- a) The ranking of applicants is determined based on the sum of the points from the entrance examination ([see letter b)] and the evaluation of extracurricular activities [see letter c)].
- b) The entrance examination is conducted in the form of a personal interview at the Faculty of Economics. If requested by an applicant living abroad, or with the consent of the Dean, or for other proven reasons based on the applicant's request, it may be held remotely using means of distance communication. In such a case, the applicant assumes the risks associated with the quality and reliability of transmission. The applicant's remote participation must enable clear identification and must also enable the applicant and the admissions committee to communicate with each other by voice and visual means in real time throughout the entire examination. If voice or visual communication with the applicant is interrupted during the admission examination, the committee will decide on further action, including the possible repetition of part or all of the admission examination.

The entrance exam assesses the submitted documents (CV and motivation letter) and tests:

- general understanding of the study programme,
 - the ability to express one's motivation for studying, and
 - language skills.
- c) The applicant's language skills are verified on the basis of a certificate or other document proving the language test passed, attached to the application in accordance with Article 1, letter b). If it is not possible to attach it due to a later acquisition, the applicant shall provide it during the admission interview. In exceptional cases, language skills may also be verified during the admission interview.
 - d) Extracurricular activities according to Article 7, letter c) (e.g. successful participation in national or international competitions, grant projects, etc.) may also be included in the final evaluation of the applicant, provided that these activities correspond to the syllabus of the study programme.
 - e) The applicant must provide original documents or electronic copies of evidence of these activities with the application. In the case of electronic copies, the applicant must be prepared to present officially certified electronic copies at the time of the admission interview.
